

Letter From Andrew Nisker

Dear Viewers,

Thank you for taking the time to watch Garbage! The Revolution Starts at Home.

This film was a very personal journey from me. Making it took me to places I never imagined existed and introduced me to people who are bigger than the greatest heroes I have known. People like Ed Wiley who selflessly made it his life's mission to help not only his child but every child in his community from going to school in the shadow of a coal processing plant. With little money but enough determination to change his world, Ed chose to walk from Coal River Valley in West Virginia to Washington to raise awareness and fight for the removal of the coal processing plant. Ed, like most of us are fed up with politics getting in the way of rational solutions.

Ed walked to Washington. I made this film. Now you are taking a stand by being here today. When the screening is over and the lights come up I promise you will feel even more empowered with the knowledge that you can make a difference. Maybe you will say goodbye to your addiction to bottled water or purge your house of chemicals that are poisoning your family and the environment. Bob Hunter, the co founder of Greenpeace once said to me "The Revolution Starts at Home". It's a simple and empowering thought that drives my desire to keep fighting for the future of my son and all the children who are about to inherit this earth.

Thank you once again for coming out and please feel free to email us with your comments and ideas for change. If you feel really inspired, do what I did. Grab a video camera and make a movie about your environmental issues. Then send it to us and let our team post it on www.garbagerevolution.com so we can share your ideas with the world and inspire each other to keep fighting for a cleaner future.

On behalf of all those who helped bring this film to you, I hope you enjoy the film.

Sincerely,

Andrew Nisker
